MARVELS OF GREAT PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION AT SAN FRANCISCO IN 1915. FOUR OF THE VIRILE SCULPTURES DESIGNED FOR THE IMPOSING TOWER OF JEWELS.

THE ADVENTURER.

THE PHILOSOPHER.

THE PRIEST.

THE SOLDIER.

Photos copyright, 1914, by Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. H. S. Crocker Co., official photographers.

THE photographs here shown are of four of the sculptures that have just been completed by John Flanagan of New York for the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco in 1915. The figures are among the strongest and most effective in the manner of their execution among the statuary that is to ornament the Exposition in profusion. The figures are entitled "The Adventurer," "The Priest," "The Soldier" and "The Philosopher." All four sculptures are to decorate the great tower gateway that will rise above the south gardens of the great central court of the Exposition, the Court of the Universe. The tower, to be known as the Tower of Jewels, will be 438 feet in height, and its base will be cleft by an archway 125 feet in height through which visitors will pass directly north from the main Exposition gates into the Court of the Universe. In the vaulted archway of the tower will be a series of allegorical paintings designed by Mr. Jules Guerin, passageway between the oceans, culminating in the final triumph in the building of the Panama canal. John Flanagan, creator of this powerful quadrivariate, began his work for his striking sculptured reliefs. One of the best specimens of his work is an elaborate decorative clock for the Congressional library at Washington.
